A Silent Salesman.

Many manufacturers of machinery that is too heavy or too bulky to be sent for inspection to a prospective customer now give their traveling alesmen sets of motion pictures that show exactly how the machines work, According to the Engineering Magazine, the salesmen carry small, light motion-picture projectors that can be connected with the lighting circuit in the office of the customer. A blank wall serves for a screen. Since the motion picture is independent of the seasons, the salesmen can show a harvester at work in winter or a seeder r planter in the full. The films also help to overcome the instinctive opposition that many buyers of machinery and equipment display toward new apparatus and new methods. Such men will not listen to the salesman or go to see the new muchine in operation, but they will look at the motion pictures.-Youth's Companion.
